New dairy proficiency testing service now available!

Guelph (Ont.) and Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue (Qc), on Tuesday, November 8, 2022

Lactanet is proud to announce the launch of AptiLab, the first ISO 17043 accredited dairy proficiency testing service provider in North America.

Backed by over 25 years of expertise, and renowned in Canada for services in both reference analyses and the production of calibration kits, Lactanet will now be offering Proficiency Testing services for raw and processed milk, cream, cheese and more. This service will be available to all dairy industry stakeholders as of January 2023.

The launch of Aptilab will provide dairy laboratories the unique opportunity to fulfill their ISO requirements for Good Laboratory and Manufacturing Practices by collaborating with a well-established, quality-oriented Canadian supplier.

“The Aptilab Team brings together all the necessary components to make this new service a success," Josée Bordeleau, Lactanet's National Laboratory Director, says of the endeavour. "An entire team of competent, experienced people will provide all clients with nothing short of the best in all areas. The Aptilab PT service will absolutely raise the bar in terms of product and service excellence."

Participants will benefit from comparing their results to reference results from ISO 17025 certified methods and instruments. Their data will be recorded in and retrieved from accredited software which will perform all the necessary statistical analyses. All kits will be made up of a range of samples representative of routinely tested concentrations for quality, components, and more.

As of today, clients may enroll for this new service by going to the AptiLab website and filling out the contact form, or by sending an email to contact@aptilab.ca. As the service develops, announcements will be made on the website and directly by email to subscribed clients, including official shipping dates and kit specifications.

Don't hesitate to contact the AptiLab team for further details or specific inquiries! We are proud to bring this new service to you.
